

Information Management, Sept. 9, 2010

Information Requirements for Energy Efficiency Programs

by Rob Farris

It has been a year since I wrote my first article on the topic of energy intelligence. Since then, we have seen many of the concepts expressed in that article really resonate with our clients. We have also seen many software vendors – from well-established enterprise application vendors to small startups and in between – start to come out with offerings that address this area. It's definitely exciting to see that these concepts are being embraced by clients and software companies alike.

Read the full article at Information Management.